Rahul Madhavan

Manager, Policy Advocacy

Rahul Madhavan is Manager, Policy Advocacy for the Aerospace & Defense, and Infrastructure portfolios with the U.S. – India Business Council. He is responsible for identifying key issues and helping shape a policy framework conducive to robust bilateral trade in the Aerospace & Defense and Infrastructure sectors. Rahul provides strategic guidance to USIBC's various member companies and works closely with each company to formulate an advocacy objective most closely aligned with industry needs and commercial interests. With an overarching goal of advancing commercial ties between the US and India, Rahul liaises key private and public sector players that are critical to the bilateral commercial and diplomatic relationship.

Prior to joining USIBC, Rahul served as Program Manager for the South Asia Studies Program at the Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies of the Johns Hopkins University, Washington D.C. In this capacity Rahul focused on assuring the smooth functioning of the academic program for the students' and faculty's benefit. A major component of his work at SAIS involved serving as a research assistant to the permanent and adjunct faculty members on issues such as US Foreign Policy towards South Asia, the specific US-India strategic relationship, China-Pakistan ties, and India's domestic economy. Rahul also managed an active public seminar series, coordinating over a hundred seminars, conferences, and events featuring diplomats, academics, policymakers, and other key stakeholders in the international affairs community.

Rahul served as a volunteer teacher and development strategist with The George Foundation in rural South India. While his primary responsibility was to teach children English, Biology, and Geography, he also administered a widespread economic and health survey aimed at improving local village conditions.

Born in Boston, Rahul has lived abroad and traveled extensively across South, East, and South East Asia, Europe, and Africa. He considers the San Francisco Bay Area to be home. He is a graduate of the University of Puget Sound and the recipient of the Susan Strange Award for distinguished achievement in the field of International Political Economy. His interests include defense and foreign policy issues, traveling, international cuisine, photography, baseball, and tribal percussion.
